CLIA Selling Cruise Day is the ultimate cruise event as we focus on giving you practical advice and support to help you grow your cruise sales. The day promises to be a great boost of inspiration and positivity as we look ahead to making the most of opportunities in 2022 and beyond.

Delegates will hear from inspirational speakers, industry leaders and expert panels as they share their unique experiences from all sectors of the industry, and have dedicated time to network at our Cruise Trade Fair, where all sponsoring cruise lines and associated businesses will showcase their products.

Access our series of
“New-to” Guides

CLIA's New-to-Cruise Guide, New-to-River Cruise Guide and New-to-Expedition Cruise Guide have all been developed to assist agents who may be new to these sectors, giving a comprehensive introduction to the differing experiences these sectors of cruise can offer your guests.

All with a strong focus on destination, they also include top sales tips to make sure you are correctly targeting these unique markets.

They can all be accessed digitally from the Agent Resources section of your MyCLIA login at cruising.org.

Coming very soon to the “New-to” series is our CLIA New-to-Yacht & Sail Cruising Guide.

Dive in to our Destination Factsheet Series

We are creating a Worldwide set of Factsheets on the many different destinations that can be enjoyed as part of a cruise holiday. Each Factsheet follows a consistent format and layout, making it perfect for quick and easy reference, and building up a better idea of how to sell the region to your guests.

It really is your one-stop-shop to understanding how these destinations are experienced by cruise guests and what they can expect from them.

Each Factsheet offers sections on:

- Top 10 reasons to cruise there
- The best time to visit
- Top 10 key attractions - including a labelled map of the region
- Top 10 things to know before you go

Give River Cruise
a Focus

2022 will see our inaugural event on the Danube, the 10th Anniversary CLIA RiverView Conference, welcoming delegates to Hungary's capital, Budapest. Offering inspirational business sessions, multiple ship inspections, local excursions and overnight stays onboard the river cruise vessels, this is an immersive experience you don't want to miss. Tickets go on sale in October.

We will also present a schedule of complimentary virtual events as we celebrate CLIA RiverView Week, beginning Monday 22 November. We encourage you to join us as we highlight the destinations, experiences and CLIA operators who offer river cruises across the World.

And for online training for those wishing to specialise in the River cruise sector, enrollment on our new RiverView Program extends access to two in-depth training courses on European and Worldwide River Cruising – completion of which offers a Certificate of #RiverCruiseExpert status.

Dining

Cruises have a mouth-watering reputation for the quality and quantity of cuisine they offer, and deservedly so.

Passengers can tuck into food virtually 24/7, starting early morning and continuing throughout the day to past midnight, while taking their pick from a rich variety of venues – most of which are included in the price.

The larger the ship, the greater the choice with up to 30 or so dining spots on the largest vessels, ranging from poolside burger bars, hotdog stands and pizza counters to classy haute cuisine restaurants and exclusive chef's table experiences.

On larger ships, in particular, diners can expect to find first-class speciality restaurants ranging from Japanese teppanyaki to American-style steakhouses or French bistros and Italian trattoria.

Some cruise lines have teamed up with speciality chefs such as Nobu Matsuhisa, Jamie Oliver and Marco Pierre White who have opened their own onboard restaurants with prices at a fraction of what they are ashore.

All ships have either a single main restaurant or a cluster of them offering different themes and these are the focal point of the onboard dining experience, where guests are generally free to take their main meals whenever and with whoever they wish to.

Traditional set dining times and shared tables are still offered for those who want them, but freedom and flexibility are key ingredients, and this is also reflected in the extensive buffet restaurants found on nearly all ships, and virtually open round-the-clock.

Cruises bring the flavours of the world together with the likes of Japanese sushi bars, English pubs and Brazilian steakhouses along with the fulsome flavours of Mexican and Tex-Mex, Asian fusion and continental cuisine.

In addition, special dinner shows bring an engaging backdrop of acrobats and entertainers, while supper clubs serve up a sophisticated vibe where singers and musicians inject musical flair into each course.

Exclusive tasting menus and private dining experiences add to the mix, along with the thrill of eating on deck at open-air grill restaurants, hot-stone dining where guests cook their own meat on slabs of volcanic rock, and full-on deck parties with mouth-watering barbecues.

Alternatively, anyone wanting more private al fresco moments can take breakfast on their balconies or enjoy dinner served course by course – sometimes by their own butler.

More ships now have their own culinary centres and show kitchens where guests can rustle up their own masterpieces under the guidance of a professional chef, having accompanied them to markets ashore to gather local ingredients.

There's no shortage of healthy-eating options too, with menus highlighting dishes low in salt and/or fat, plus low-sugar desserts. Special dietary needs are also catered for, from vegan and vegetarian to diabetic and gluten-free requirements.

It's not all about the food either as ships boast impressive wine cellars serving some of the best vintages and have also tapped into the craft beer craze with a growing selection of ales and lagers. Some even have their own onboard breweries, while others offer dedicated bars serving champagne, different-flavoured gins or exotic mojitos.

Additionally, a growing appetite for epicurean experiences has sparked growth in food and wine themed cruises with classes and talks plus wine and food-tastings that tie-in with excursions ashore to areas such as Bordeaux or the Iberian Peninsula.

Onboard Activities & Entertainment

There's no time to get bored on cruise holidays as ships are buzzing hubs of activity with the largest vessels resembling floating resorts.

While guests are free to do as much or as little as they please, they will not be short of choice especially on sea days when the ship becomes the main attraction with a full programme of classes and activities that run from early morning until late at night.

Sea days are when ship attractions come into their own (though sometimes it's even better to experience them in port, without queues, when many passengers are ashore).

Aside from numerous swimming pools, hot tubs and water play areas that nearly all ships now have, there are a host of high-adrenaline thrills that range from waterslides and zipwires to surfing simulators and climbing walls. Passengers can also pound top-deck jogging tracks while admiring the views, tap into their competitive streak on sports courts or even serve up games of paddle tennis.

Cruises can be ideal for guests wanting to dabble in more unusual pastimes such as fencing classes or learning how to scuba dive. If it's simply a matter of keeping fit, nearly all ships have gyms and exercise studios where pumping iron is accompanied by classes offering everything from aerobics, yoga and Pilates to meditation, body sculpting and Zumba.

Anyone after less energetic diversions can browse the onboard libraries, attend fascinating lectures by eminent speakers or pit their wits in brainstorming quizzes. Alternatively, art enthusiasts can bid for a favourite painting during auctions in the ship's art gallery or relax on deck while watching a film on a giant movie screen.

When it comes to learning a new skill or perfecting existing ones, there are numerous options. Many ships now have state-of-the-art show kitchens for cookery classes, while some have craft studios where enthusiasts can brush up their artistic talents.

Singing workshops and onboard choirs along with dancing classes inject a musical theme, while budding techies can brush up their knowledge on the latest innovative kit or sign up to digital film-making tutorials.

But it's evenings when ships really come alive with glitz and glamour. Ultra-modern ships boasting hi-tech facilities now stage interactive shows full of breath-taking special effects with acrobatic displays, ice-skating spectacles and West End and Broadway shows such as Mamma Mia!, Hairspray and Kinky Boots.

Cruise lines have also adapted hit TV shows such as Strictly Come Dancing, The Voice and Pop Idol with their own versions, while others have partnered with international names including Cirque du Soleil, Liverpool's Cavern Club for Beatles tribute bands, and BB King's Blues Club.

Larger ships have dedicated comedy clubs where alternative-style adult-only and family-friendly comic acts take to the stage, while some ships fly in top comedians or magicians (sometimes straight from Las Vegas) for one-off performances.

Ship theatres are still the main hub for evening entertainment with cabaret productions that generally pay tribute to musical styles and eras, though there are quieter alternatives in smaller cosy venues with classical recitals or folkloric displays by local artistes. The larger the ship, the bigger the choice of nightspots, with piano bars providing everything from soothing selections to lively singalongs and duelling piano blowouts, lively karaoke evenings or silent discos.

Dining can also be given added sparkle with themed dinner shows and live musical performances in cosy supper clubs and the beat can rumble on into the small hours at onboard nightclubs and late-night cabaret bars.

Evenings are not just about adult entertainment as dedicated cinema rooms or giant outdoor screens will show movies, and even provide popcorn, while youngsters can also enjoy special family-friendly game shows and contests.

Shore Excursions

Exploring ashore on cruises is more varied than ever thanks to the increasingly diverse selection of tours now offered.

Cruise lines have upped the ante to feature a host of exciting and insightful experiences guaranteed to help passengers get the most out of every port they visit.

Aside from basic sightseeing coach tours that have always formed the backbone of destination programmes, guests can also choose from any number of shore activities designed to appeal to all tastes and ages. Most generally last for a full or half-day, though some involve overnight stays away from the ship too.

Intrepid travellers can sign up for thrilling zip-wire rides or kayaking trips; animal-lovers can join wildlife tours; and cultural fans can revel in after-hours visits to leading cultural attractions such as St Petersburg's Hermitage Museum or Venice's Doge's Palace.

In keeping with the growing trend for more adventure, cruise companies have pumped up the thrills with glacier hikes, powerboating trips and helicopter rides, while a rising roll-call of culinary-led tours feed into increasing interest in epicurean options.

These come in a variety of flavours, encompassing trips to local markets with the ship's chef to buy ingredients, learning how to make regional specialities at a local cookery school, gastronomic extravaganzas at top-flight restaurants or even dining on homemade dishes in a local home.

It's not all about masses of passengers being herded on to coaches as selected options may involve small more personalised groups and, in some cases, guests can pay to have their own car and driver or a special tour organised by their cruise ship concierge.

Families can choose from child-friendly trips visiting water parks, animal attractions or iconic sporting sites such as Barcelona's famous Camp Nou football stadium. Some lines even organise family-friendly scavenger hunts, and most of these options feature reduced prices for youngsters.

With cruises visiting more far-flung destinations, the choice and scope of tours continues to expand. Travellers wanting to get under the skin of the places they sail to can also visit schools or meet local families in their homes, while those wanting to donate their time can participate in voluntourism excursions by helping out at animal charities or community projects.

With ships staying later into the evening in selected ports or even docking for one or more nights, there are tours that sample the local nightlife or travel further afield to notable attractions on overnight trips.

Cruise companies have also become more adept at organising one-off exclusive experiences for guests which, in some cases, may be included in the price of the cruise, though tours to special concerts, cultural performances or dinners generally carry an extra charge.

At the other end of the scale, there are no-frills transfer options that enable guests to pay for trips to beaches or cities, such as Rome, where they are then free to explore on their own.

As some shore excursions have limited places, it is worth booking them online in advance of the cruise departure and this is generally possible as cruise lines detail tours for each sailing on their websites. The next best option is to book on embarkation day.

One of the biggest advantages of cruise ship tours is peace of mind as the lines work with reputable and experienced operators. Another crucial factor to remember is that ships will always wait for their tour groups to return, even if they're running late, and will not sail without them.

Staterooms

There can be a bewildering choice of accommodation on cruise ships, with some of the mega-ships offering more than 30 different stateroom types. But it is worth noting that these break down to four basic categories.

Inside/interior staterooms, which do not have a window or porthole; outside/ocean view staterooms that have a porthole or window; and balcony/veranda staterooms which are the most popular choice.

The most expensive, and luxurious, category is suite accommodation which has separate sleeping and living areas split into different rooms or in one large room, but separated by a curtain.

Junior suites tend to be entry-level grade and on some cruise ships may simply be a more spacious version of a balcony stateroom. At the other end of the scale are owner's suites that come with acres of space, opulent décor, balcony hot tubs and butler service.

Most cruise companies, especially US lines, also describe their accommodation as staterooms whereas other lines may call them cabins, which is the more traditional term. Regardless, there is no difference between them.

Rather like hotel rooms, all cabins come with a selection of fixtures and fittings as standard that include a TV (normally flat-screen), and sometimes a DVD, a minibar or fridge, and hairdryer. The majority of cabins also have private safes.

There is clothes storage with wardrobes and/or drawers, and guests can generally stow their luggage beneath the bed. There is usually a dressing table area and perhaps a small table with a chair.

All cabins have ensuite facilities that include a shower, though some higher-grade accommodation will also have a bath too.

Among the stateroom variations are spa suites/cabins which have the same distinction as those listed above, but come with a package of amenities and are close to or have direct access to wellness facilities.

Virtual inside cabins are a new phenomenon on a handful of ships that have “virtual balconies” or “virtual portholes” – special screens showing real-time footage from the ship via external cameras.

The rise in family-orientated ships has also ushered in more family-friendly accommodation, with cabins offering additional space with extra beds that slot down from the ceiling or bunks that fold out from sofas. Inter-connecting cabins for families with older children are another good option.

While the accommodation grade determines the price, another influencing factor is its location on the ship as staterooms on lower decks are cheaper while those on higher decks – which enjoy better views and are closer to facilities – cost more.

Families may want a location closer to children's clubs, while passengers susceptible to seasickness should opt for a midship cabin which is less affected by ship movement.

Anyone sensitive to noise should avoid accommodation just below the main lido deck, entertainment areas or on low decks close to the ship's engines, while passengers with mobility issues should opt for staterooms close to the elevators and restaurants.

While many cabins are doubles or twins, a growing number of cruise lines are catering for solo travellers with single staterooms – though such is the demand, these are always among the first to sell out.

In addition to suites, there has been a rise in premium-category cabins that have access to their own private areas, whether it's an exclusive lounge where snacks and drinks are served, selected restaurants, or a VIP deck area. Some ships have pushed this concept even further with “ship within a ship” complexes, that have their own private entrances and cannot be accessed by other passengers.
